WILTS v. DORSET

This match was commenced at Troybridge on Friday, on a splendid wicket. Goodden had the good fortune to win the toes, but Dorset lost two wickets for 25. Then Harrly and Botton made a neeful stand, putting on 70 before the made of the property of the two wides of the made of the ma the Wills meduling was none too good; just enough runs being given away by poor placing of the field to lose the points. The team, too, suffered through the absence of a fast bowler. To play three slow left-hand howlers—Fare-brother, Mitchell, and Overton—on a perfect batamen's wicker is courting defeat. Sarely there is one fast bowler in the county some-

50, but he bowled with wonderful and 50, but he bowled with wonderful steadiness, taking wickets in every match but one, and having sixty-six in all at under 25 each. In 1907, though his batting fell off a bit—82° v. Worcestershire, 75 v. Warwickshire, and 52° v. Lancashire were his chief scores—he bowled with great effectiveness. Twelve wickets fell to him for 137 in the match v. Hants at Portsmouth is consisted Classocterships at Taunten has hed ten for 107 including steadiness, taking against Gloucestershire at Taunton he had ten for 107, including fire for eight in the second innings; and among his other analyses were seven for 84 v. Worcestershire, six for 42 v. Kent, and six for 82 v. Lancashire. Altogether he had eighty-two wickets at under 21 each.

Beginning 1908 with 11 runs in five successive innings, he never quite ran into his best batting vein, though he scored 102 v. Middlesex at Lord's and 60 against the same side at Taunton, with 57* v. Surrey at the Oval. But he did a lot of fine bowling, achieving a marked success v. Warwickshire at Learnington, where he took fourteen wickets for 161 runs. The 80 wickets he took were more costly than his eighty-two in 1907, though, averaging 27 each.

About this time it looked as though his hard work at the bowling crease might spoil his batting. In the first three months of the 1909 season, he only once topped 50, making 67* v. Gloucestershire at Taunton, when he and Robson hit up 150 runs in 50 minutes. In the same match he had seven wickets for 40 in Gloucestershire's first; and up to August 11th he had done so consistently well with the ball that fifty-five wickets had fallen to him at a cost of less than 15 each. Then, at Taunton, Kent ran up 468, punishing him for 124 runs with the offset of only one wicket, and made the home side follow on nearly 300 in arrear. But Somerset made the home side follow on nearly 300 in arrear. But Somerset was not beaten. Lewis played the innings of his life. In four and a half hours he scored 201, gave no chance until he had made 128, and fairly saved the game for his side.

Last season he was always making runs and taking wickets, fighting up-hill fights as if he enjoyed them, and establishing the reputation which led to his being, none too early, accorded a place in a representative team, for the Rest v. England at Lord's a few weeks ago. He did not make a century in 1910, but he played five innings of over 50, and eight more of from 20 to 50; and he took seventy-nine wickets including fourteen for hill v. Kest at Thurbid. seventy-nine wickets, including fourteen for 141 v. Kent at Tunbridge Wells, and eight for 107 against the same side at Taunton. This season he has made 126 v. Gloucestershire at Taunton, 93 v. Hants of Both and 60 v. Verschire at Taunton, 93 v. Hants of Both and 60 v. Verschire at Taunton, 93 v. Hants season he has made 126 v. Gloucestershire at Taunton, 93 v. Hants at Bath, and 69 v. Yorkshire at Taunton, and has bowled well, taking six for 76 v. Yorkshire at Leeds, nine for 58 v. Hants at Bath, five for 33 v. Middlesex at Bath, and six for 65 v. Gloucestershire at Bristol. But illness hampered him in July, and he has had to stand down for two or three of the August matches owing to an injury to the muscles of his right arm—a sad loss to his side, which could the less be afforded because Robson also was crocked.

There is nothing particularly morthodox or unusual in Lewis's

There is nothing particularly unorthodox or unusual in Lewis's methods either as batsman or bowler. He scores in most directions, methods either as bassman or powier. He scores in most directions, and makes his strokes well; his bowling is fast medium, getting up quickly from the pitch, and with plenty of spin. Up to date (August 31st), he has totalled 7,691 runs in first-class cricket, with an average of 21.72, and has taken 505 wickets at 21.86 each. He has never reached four figures in runs or taken a hundred wickets in a season; but then he has been playing for a side that always has a comparatively brief programme.

Honour to the man who wins matches for his side by pluck and nerve and skill, but higher honour still to him who puts up a great fight in game after game for a team on whom Dame Fortune consistently frowns-and Lewis is a man of that sort, beyond all doubt. J. N.-PENTELOW.
